

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A medication delivery device by virtue of which multiple medications are produced in various medication delivery device forms, including particularly pill, capsule, gel-cap or soft gel form, which medication delivery device forms are readily identifiable by color or shape, and which medication delivery device forms are connected and affixed one to another, though the use of a bonding material, glue or adhesive, in a chain, train or string fashion, thus presenting to the patient that which appears to be only one item for ingestion or insertion into a live body, without the use or employment of any biodegradable outer container intended for ingestion or insertion into a live body, into which outer container the said various pills might have otherwise been inserted, and with said connection and affixation being intentionally separable to facilitate ingestion or to enable intentional selective removal of one or more connected or affixed components.